FRANCE'S OPPORTUNITY.

The acquisition of Toukin sprang, like our own conquest of India, out of the exploits of small band of adventurers, under Dupuis, who a small steamer ascended the Red River with perate but unsuccessful attempt was made by Mr. Leach instructed by Messrs. Caldwell and the Black Flags to capture their small craft, on the plea that they had not paid black mail to the chief of the band. These Black Flags were Chinese ontlaws, the remnants of the Taiping Rebels, who on being vanquished in 1861-62 fled southwards and had settled in this inaccessible region, where they held their own in spite of the King of Annam, being governed by military chiefs protty much in the same way they had been accustomed to under their own Taiping leaders, without the admixture of religion peculiar to the latter

Until then it was confidently believed that with the suppression of the Black Flags, a feat application was made to the defendants for which every French military officer anticipated ing out the work, as the attempt to get one up would cease But, as the military operations proceeded and the Black Flags instead diminishing were found to increase, while suggests that the only way to carry the scheme helr arms and ammunition became better and better-spears and gingula giving way to rifles and baronets of improved pattern—a cause began to be sought for this. As the French pavy and army prevented any supplies coming by way of Haiphong, only one conclusion could be come to, and that was, that China indirectly was answerable for the improved armaand sale of the shares. On the Slat August ment of the e Taiping hordes, and at last, in the acceptance of the treaty Mexico is desirous Mr. Renden had come to him and asked him 1885, this view riponed into convictin when Chinese soldiers, either regulars or irregulars were found opposing the future advance of the and that the Vicercy has written to the Minister nothing on this or any other occasion about French arms. It was found that near the junction of the Szechuen and Hankow Roads. an ignorant coolie or native workman employed by the Electric Company, finding the light wire and the telegraph line too close together, had tied the light wire with a piece of stout string up to a higher telegraph line. While the weather remained dry no evil consequences ensued, but a shower of rain wetting the string transformed it into a perfect conductor, and the terrific current from the light wire passed into the telegraph line in question. We are informed that had the line in the telegraph office been working that night, the instrument probably would have been broken to pieces and the operator using it instantly killed or the place set on fire. Such a current as that communicated by the electric light wire would be sufficient, we are told, even to fuse the sables : but as it was, no harm was done beyond s delay in the telegraph service of a couple of hours. The Telegraph Companies have submitted certain rules to be observed by the Electric Company abridged from those enforced by the Board of Trade at home in the matter of seting up electric light wires in streets and roa s

Briefly, they are that no electric light wire shall approach within twelve feet of a telegraph line, and never run parallel to the same unless when absolutely necessary, and then at a distance of at least 12 feet, that they shall always be at east 4 feet below the telegraph wire and further protected by "dummy" wires in case of breakage. The Council have referred the matter to their engineer, and no doubt we shall see the whole correspondence published in the minutes next week CHINAN-FU.

Lt began by some one dropping a match in the midst o some cotton, which at once took fire, and this spread to some old shops adjoining. At first the only business seemed to be that of people hasten ing their goods into the streets. No pails were ready, no engine was seen, no water was secured After considerable delay, when a crowd had gathered and the magistrate appeared, water was brought and a few pails were secured. little later a small squirt-gun or so-called fire engine appeared on the scene, and began to sprinkle the burning buildings. Two or three foreigners were also visible and rendered some assistance in pouring water on the flames and hauling away beams and heards to a safer place where the fire could be put out at leisure. A portion of the military yamen and five or six shops were burned, while a little temple and a street, were all that separated the house of the foreigners from the spreading flames. Once these missionaries could look upon a heathen temple as their defence from danger. A new Prefect has at last assumed the duties of office in this city, an official by the name of Lu Chi-kuang. On the northern shore of the Daddon estuary, in the county of Camberland, there has been steadily worked during the last twenty years or more an important mine, producing a large quantity of rich red hematite iron. This mine is owned by the Hodbarrow Mining Company. who are proprietors of the land, the mineral rights being leased to them by the Earl of Lonsdale. The ore having been encavated or "won" as close to the sea margin as it has been possible to work without letting down the surface of the land and admitting the influx of the sea, thereby drowning the mine, the company have recently obtained a fresh lease from Lord Lonsdale, undertaking to construct a barrier to keep back the sea along that portion of the estuary in front of the mine, in order that they might " win" the ore from underneath some twenty-six acres of the sea-bed. To effect this object (says the Times) a massive and substantial sea barrier has now been constructed. This great sea-barrier presents an imposing appearance. It is just two thirdsof a mile in length, R. and for about one-half this length is fully 50 ft. in height from the bottom of the foundations to the top of the parapet. At high-water of high. spring-tides there is a depth of rather more than 20 ft. against the seaward face of the work; but, air being exposed during south-westerly gales to the full force of the waves sweeping up the Trish Chaunel, backed by the Atlantic rollers, the sea ill at such times breaks with great violence against ra the new barrier, as was, of course, expected and has been provided for in the structure just completed. The engineer of the work is Sir John Coods, and the contractors are the well-known firm of Mesers. Lucas and Aird. There is every reason to believe that the anticipations of the directors and shareholders of being able to continue the wor ing of the iron ore over a further period of twenty-five years may be realized, thus giving employment during that time to about
